CHAMBERS, J. — In Gideon v. Wainwright, 372 U.S. 335, 83 S. Ct. 792, 9 L. Ed. 2d 799 (1963), the United States Supreme Court guaranteed to indigents the right of legal representation at public expense. King County, like other local governments in this state, sought ways to provide the required defense services to indigent criminal defendants. After investigating several different models, the county settled on a unique system using nonprofit corporations to provide services funded through and monitored by the county’s Office of the Public Defender (OPD) (formerly the Office of Public Defense). It is, in many ways, a model system providing quality representation to the poor. Over time, the county has taken steps to improve and make these nonprofit organizations more accountable to the county. In so doing, it has asserted more control over the groups that provide defender services. Kevin Dolan contends that the defender organizations are now no different than any other agency of King County and that the employees of these defender organizations are now, and for some time have been, entitled to be enrolled in the government's Public Employees Retirement System (PERS). After a trial on the record, the trial court agreed with the class. Applying the pertinent statutes and common law principles, we hold that the employees of the defender entities are "employees" under RCW 41.40.010(12) and are entitled to be enrolled in the PERS. We affirm the trial court and remand to that court for further proceedings regarding remedies.

FACTS AND PROCEDURAL HISTORY

Resolution of the issues presented requires a detailed review of the relationship between King County and its public defender organizations. In 1969, the first King County nonprofit public defender entity, The Defender Association (TDA), was created as a joint venture with the city of Seattle and the federal Model Cities Program. The independent nature of TDA was a primary reason for the county's adoption of this model. The county thought public defense "must be divorced as far as possible from the control of the entity which is placing the recipients' liberty in jeopardy, that is, from King County." Clerks Papers (CP) at 1314 (Report of King County Council Operations and Judiciary Committee).

Over the years, the system evolved into its present form, with four public defense organizations providing almost all indigent defense services for the county. The Associated Counsel for the Accused (ACA) was created in 1973. The Society of Counsel for the Representation of Accused Persons (SCRAP) was formed at the request of the county in 1976. The Northwest Defenders Association (NDA) was established in 1987 in response to the county's desire for an organization with a larger number of minority management and board members. Another public defense organization, the Eastside Defender Association, was formed in 1978 and then discontinued in 1984.

A few years after its formation, TDA had several King County representatives on its board of directors. At the time, local government participation seemed “necessary to assure the visibility and longevity of the program.” CP at 1336 (Letter from King County Executive). However, by 1979, all the nonprofit public defender groups had independent boards and substantial autonomy over operations. See id. at 1336-37; see also CP at 1340-42 (1979 TDA Contract). Each defender organization negotiated a contract with the county for the services the organization would perform for a fee. The county managed its public defense program through the OPD, a division of King County’s Department of Community and Human Services and ultimately part of the county’s executive branch. The OPD was and is responsible for screening eligible defendants, assigning cases, negotiating and administering the contracts with the four defender groups, and managing the funds provided by the county. The OPD and the public defender organizations negotiate new contracts annually.

Over the course of several decades the county began to exert more and more control over the defender organizations. This evolution of greater county control was in response to several events and the county’s desire for efficient budgeting, high quality of defender services, and parity in pay among deputy prosecutors and public defenders doing similar work. An event in 1984 seems critical to the evolution of the relationship between the county and defender organizations. An audit of the Eastside Defender Association revealed that the director was engaged in some self-dealing, including renting space from his daughters and paying his wife for financial advice, and that the organization's board consisted of himself, his wife, and his mechanic.¹ These revelations caused the county to cancel its contract with Eastside Defender Association, which immediately then ceased to exist. It also caused the county to carefully scrutinize expenditures and to require a reorganization of its relationship with all the defender organizations.

The defender organizations were required to provide the county with a detailed budget of the costs of providing anticipated defender services, and those estimated costs became part of the contract amount between the county and the organization. CP at 1270-71 (Boruchowitz Decl). By 1990, the county went to a cost pass-through budget system, also referred to as a zero-based budget system.² Id. at 1273, 1275. Expenses of each defender organization became a line item in the county's budget. CP at 628-29 (Chapman Decl.). The contract budgets were based on the defender organizations' actual costs and the county's projection of the case load, which in turn determined the number of defense lawyers needed and the ratios of staff to lawyers. Id. at 629, 634. Later the defender organizations were advised by the county that equipment purchased for $1,000 or more belonged to the county. CP at 1279 (Boruchowitz Decl.). Through this process, the county had effective right of control and approval over all leases and other defender organizations' expenditures. E.g. CP at 2891-92 (Daly Dep.).

Also during the 1980s, the defender organizations argued that defender

¹ Despite the irregularities, there did not appear to be any violations of the law or the contract between the Eastside Defender Association and the county. CP at 1345.

² The county used the same budget system for its own agencies and departments. CP at 628 (Chapman Decl.).

lawyers should receive the same pay as prosecutors because they did similar work and, unlike prosecutors, defenders were constitutionally mandated. In 1989, the county commissioned the Kenny Group to study prosecutors and public defenders, classify their positions, and address the issue of pay parity for public defenders. The Kenny Group created and classified five levels of deputy prosecuting attorneys, three levels of senior deputy prosecuting attorneys, four levels of public defense attorneys, and three levels of senior public defense attorneys. CP at 627 (Chapman Decl.). The Kenny classifications became known as the Kenny Scale. Id. at 626. The county provided by ordinance that salary parity would be phased in over two years.³ The record before us is less than crystal clear on parity. It appears that while the county made an effort toward parity, the defender organizations never felt parity was achieved. According to the defender organizations, the county failed to provide funding for senior defender positions and therefore the organizations had to classify defenders in lower classifications than prosecutors with similar experience.⁴ CP at 1282 (Boruchowitz Decl.). The county also took the position that parity only applied to base pay and not benefits. Id. at 1277. The county did provide funding for mandatory employer taxes such as the Federal Insurance Contribution Act tax and unemployment insurance. Id. at 1278. The county also provided sufficient funding for medical benefits; however, the county did not provide sufficient funding for the defender organizations to make meaningful retirement contributions. CP at 662 (Chapman Decl.). Apparently the defender organizations had goals of providing retirement benefits of up to four percent but funding only permitted a contribution of one percent, two percent, or nothing depending on the budget. Id.; CP at 1278 (Boruchowitz Decl.).

In 2002, NDA sought to rent some office space in downtown Seattle that carried a higher rent than customary for defender groups. In August 2002, the county audited NDA and found what it considered several irregularities. NDA, perhaps believing it could legitimately do so as an independent organization contracting with the county, was branching out into civil and for-profit work and rented office space for these purposes. The county perceived NDA's actions as using some of the county's funding for improper purposes. Further, the county believed NDA did not have a properly constituted board of directors and had leased a space unapproved by the county. The county's Department of Community and Human Services brought a receivership action against NDA. On September 27, 2002, the trial court granted the county's motion to have a receiver appointed for NDA. The receiver was given "exclusive possession and control over all assets [of NDA], with the power and authority to preserve, protect, and liquidate them for the benefit of plaintiff [King County]."⁵ CP at 2335.

In the process of reorganizing NDA, the county required changes in the composition of the board of directors, bylaws, corporate articles, employee policies, financial practices, and contract with the county for all of its public defender organizations. CP at 3120 (Robinson Dep. at 27-29); CP at 2236-37 (Farley Decl.). All defender groups were made subject to a new contract that gave King County the authority to terminate the contract without cause upon 45-days notice, to review client files, to unilaterally determine whether funds were properly expended, and which also restricted the organizations' ability to turn down individual cases.^{6,7} Id. at 2238; CP at 1279 (Boruchowitz Decl.); CP at 646 (Chapman Decl.); CP at 2393-2413, 2394, 2395, 2397, 2411 (2003 NDA Contract).

The record reflects that many defender board members had serious misgivings about the new order of things and were very concerned about the new limits on the defender organizations' ability to limit assignments and thereby run the risk of ethical dilemmas. One board member said the county was transforming a supposedly independent nonprofit into a "vassal agency." CP at 4331 (TDA Board Minutes). But, because the county was the source of the vast majority of revenue, to refuse to agree to the contract meant that the organizations, like the Eastside Defender Association, would cease to exist.⁸

⁸ In 2004, the city of Seattle ended its 20-year arrangement with King County to provide defense services through its defender organizations. It contracted directly with ACA, and ACA now receives approximately $3 million a year from the city, about one quarter of the total operating budget. However, ACA could not continue its public defense operations without the $9 to $10 million provided by county funding. CP at 660 (Chapman Decl.). TDA receives approximately 90 percent of its funding from King County, with some additional grants from the county and the State for racial disparity and sexually violent predator programs, and other funding sources for public defense related work, such as a contract with Seattle Municipal Courts, making up the balance. CP at 1285 (Boruchowitz Decl.). TDA could not continue in its present form without county funding. Id. SCRAP receives 98 percent of its annual $10 million budget from King County, with the remainder made up of two small grants from the county and the State for public defense related projects. CP at 1733 (Daly Decl.). The county was the sole source of funds for NDA in 2003. CP at 2238 (Farley Decl.). It appears that was still the case until at least 2008.

According to evidence in the record, these board members agreed to the new arrangement primarily out of concern for what would happen to the organizations' employees and because of concern for the organizations' client base. See CP at 646-47 (Chapman Decl.); CP at 1281 (Boruchowitz Decl.). Ultimately all defender groups signed the contract despite serious misgivings.

In 2005, the county developed a new and complex "public defense payment model." CP at 648-52 (Chapman Decl.). The budgets of all of the defender organizations were blended together for presentation to the county, and the county calculated an average percentage to be allocated to each organization on the basis of projected caseloads, the Kenny Scale, attorney to staff ratios, and past data on the overhead expenses and administrative costs for each organization. The new model effectively treats the four defender organizations as one for budgeting purposes. CP at 652 (Chapman Decl.).

There is no dispute the defender organizations have autonomy to make day-to-day decisions on the representation of indigent clients. Because, of course, the county is bringing the charges against the defendants represented by the defender organizations, the county has made an effort not to interfere with attorney/client relationships or trial strategies.

On January 24, 2006, Dolan filed a class action in the Pierce County Superior Court on behalf of the employees of the four King County defender organizations seeking enrollment in PERS. The trial court certified the class of "[a]ll W-2 employees of the King County public defender agencies and any former or predecessor King County public defender agencies who work or have worked for one of the King County public defender agencies within three years of filing this lawsuit.” CP at 7087 (Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law at 1). The parties agreed to separate the trial into two distinct phases: liability first, then remedies. The parties further agreed that, if the court denied summary judgment, the judge should decide the issues on the basis of the written record alone. The trial court denied both parties’ motions for summary judgment and commenced a bench trial on the written record to determine liability.

The class presented evidence that the county treated the defender organizations exactly like the county treated any other agency of the county. For example, defender groups participate in the county budgeting process exactly like any other agency. See CP at 2684 (Cruz Decl.); CP at 2646-47 (Thoenig Decl.). Each item of expense such as rent, payroll, lease payments on equipment, and other costs, becomes a separate line item in the budget.⁹ It is the budget process that determines the amount the defender group receives. In the event of a budget crisis where there is a countywide reduction in budget, the defender groups must reduce their budgets in the same percentage as other agencies.¹ CP at 628 (Chapman Decl.). Once the budget is approved, the total budget amount becomes the contract amount. Id. at 625. According to evidence presented by the class, there is no real negotiation of the contract, and signing the contract is a formality, which sometimes occurs after the contract period has expired. Id. at 625, 631, 638-39. The county has maintained that the defender organizations may not retain for their own purposes any profits or any funds that may be left over from the budget. CP at 2233 (Farley Decl.); see also CP at 1237-38 (Daly Decl.). Nor are they held liable for any budget shortages. See CP at 7176 (Resp'ts' WAC Factor Chart). The class also points out that, like the defender organizations, county agencies have authority to exercise discretion in day-to-day activities including the hiring and firing of employees. CP at 268-82 (Cruz Decl.).

⁹ It is not clear whether this remains the case after the new 2005 budget process came into effect.

The county points out that the defender organizations have historically been independent, with their own articles and bylaws, control over day-to-day operations, and independent boards of directors. Moreover, the organizations file Form 990 with the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), which confirms their status as private nonprofits. See, e.g., CP at 6146 (TDA tax exemption form). The county also asserts that the organizations have complete control over their funds, stating that the budgetary formula “generated a sum of money that each corporation could spend any way it wanted.”¹¹ Br. of Pet'r at 43.

The county has made an admirable effort to establish parity among the lawyers who work for the prosecutor's office and the defender organizations. All receive the same cost-of-living increases. All employees of the defender organizations must comply with the county's “Employee Code of Ethics.” CP at 1747 (Daly Decl.).

The trial court found the class was eligible for PERS enrollment on the separate but overlapping ground that the defender organizations were arms and agencies of the county, and the county was an employer of the organizations' employees. The court granted an injunction ordering enrollment, but left the enrollment date open pending further motions by the parties. The trial court did not reach the issue of remedies. The county moved for certification for immediate discretionary review under RAP 2.3(b)(4) and a stay of proceedings pending appeal. The trial court granted both motions, and we accepted review. Thus, the question before this court is the eligibility of the class for enrollment in PERS. Since we have never interpreted or applied the PERS statutes and regulations at issue here, it is a question of first impression.

1. Standard of Review

Where the record at trial consists entirely of written documents and the trial court therefore was not required to “assess the credibility or competency of witnesses, and to weigh the evidence, nor reconcile conflicting evidence,” the appellate court reviews de novo. Progressive Animal Welfare Soc’y v. Univ. of Wash., 125 Wn.2d 243, 252, 884 P.2d 592 (1994) (quoting Smith v. Skagit County, 75 Wn.2d 715, 718, 453 P.2d 832 (1969)). However, where competing documentary evidence must be weighed and issues of credibility resolved, the substantial evidence standard is appropriate. In re Marriage of Rideout, 150 Wn.2d 337, 351, 77 P.3d 1174 (2003). The county argues that de novo review is proper here.

Dolan responds that the substantial evidence standard is more appropriate in this case. Dolan points out that the trial court was required to weigh over 6,000 pages of testimony and exhibits, resolve conflicts, and issue formal findings of fact as required by CR 52(a)(1). In essence, Dolan argues that the complexity and size of the record, and the careful weighing of that record for over three months by the trial court, make the substantial evidence standard preferable to de novo review despite the lack of any specific issues of credibility.

Appellate courts give deference to trial courts on a sliding scale based on how much assessment of credibility is required; the less the outcome depends on credibility, the less deference is given to the trial court. Washington has thus applied a de novo standard in the context of a purely written record where the trial court made no determination of witness credibility. See Smith, 75 Wn.2d at 719. However, substantial evidence is more appropriate, even if the credibility of witnesses is not specifically at issue, in cases such as this where the trial court reviewed an enormous amount of documentary evidence, weighed that evidence, resolved inevitable evidentiary conflicts and discrepancies, and issued statutorily mandated written findings. See Rideout, 150 Wn.2d at 352; Anderson v. City of Bessemer City, 470 U.S. 564, 574-75, 105 S. Ct. 1504, 84 L. Ed. 2d 518 (1985) (deference rationale not limited to credibility determinations but also grounded in fact-finding expertise and conservation of judicial resources). We apply the substantial evidence standard in this case because of the size and complexity of the record and the need to resolve conflicting assertions. Having examined the record carefully, however, we would reach the same result if we applied a de novo standard of review.

2. PERS Eligibility

a. Arms and Agencies

A PERS eligible employee must work for a PERS employer. See RCW 41.40.010(12) (former RCW 41.40.010(22) (1997)); RCW 41.40.010(13) (former RCW 41.40.010(4) (1993)). A PERS “employer” is defined in relevant part as “every branch, department, agency, commission, board, and office of the state.” RCW 41.40.010(13)(a), (b). Counties are “but arms or agencies of the state.” State ex. rel. Taylor v. Superior Court, 2 Wn.2d 575, 579, 98 P.2d 985 (1940). Thus, if we conclude, as Dolan contends, that the defender organizations are in fact arms or agencies of the county, then the defender organizations’ employees are employees as defined by RCW 41.40.010(12).

Dolan asserts that under common law standards the county has such a right of control over the organizations that the organizations are arms and agencies of the county, and thus the State, and therefore employees of the organizations are PERS eligible. Dolan argues the county has general control over the organizations through its budget process and the fact that the organizations would not exist without county funding.¹² Dolan asserts the county has used that control to “rewrite articles of incorporation, bylaws, and contracts, renegotiate leases, and change employee policies and procedures.” Resp’ts’ Br. at 23-24. Dolan points out the defense organizations are thoroughly integrated into the county budgeting process and administrative procedures to the extent that the only difference between the King County nonprofit entities and the Pierce County Department of Assigned Counsel, an official county department, is formal, not functional. Resp’ts’ Br. at 20-21, 30 (citing CP at 662-62 (Chapman Decl.); CP at 2648 (Thoenig Decl.)). Dolan also contends the many limitations imposed on the defender groups are further evidence of control, including prohibitions on other sources of revenue, affiliation with other entities, leasing of office space, competition with other defender organizations for market share, and spending budgeted funds from the county. Resp’ts’ Br. at 24-25, 34-36 (citing, e.g., CP at 660-61 (Chapman Decl.); CP at 1738, 1749 (Daly Decl.); CP at 2237, 2239 (Farley Decl.)).

King County calls Dolan’s claim a “de facto agency” argument and contends de facto agencies are disfavored under Washington law. The county maintains that, even if there is such a thing as a de facto agency in Washington, the defender organizations are independent both historically and in their day-to-day operations, as their private nonprofit status in contracts, corporate documents, and tax forms indicates. Br. of Pet’r at 54-55 (citing, e.g., CP at 6183-6299 (Organizations’ Articles of Incorporation); CP at 5903-6168 (Organizations’ IRS Filings)). The county asserts contrary to Dolan’s claims that a defender organization could spend the lump sum budgeted to it “any way it wanted.” Pet’r’s Br. at 43 (emphasis removed). It also disputes that the organizations are required to have an exclusive relationship with the county. Pet'r's Br. at 17 n.3 (citing, e.g., CP at 2843-44 (Chapman Dep. at 113-14)). As discussed above, the county argues that it is undisputed the defender organizations have autonomy to hire and fire and promote employees. The defenders respond that their limited authority to decide how to spend funds and to hire and fire is no different than the authority enjoyed by other county agencies.

Dolan relies largely on two sources of authority for the proposition that the control the county has over the defender organizations can render them arms and agencies of the State. In 1956, the Washington Attorney General issued an opinion that stated that the Associated Students of the University of Washington (ASUW), a nonprofit corporation that is the primary student organization at the university, was an "arm and agency" of the university—and thus the State—because the university had the right of final approval of all actions taken by the ASUW. 1956 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 267, at 2-3. Thus, employees of ASUW were entitled to be included as members of the state retirement system. Id. at 6.

Similarly, the Oregon Court of Appeals held a private nonprofit formed by the city of Portland to manage its energy policy was an instrumentality of the city for the purposes of Oregon's PERS. State ex rel. Pub. Emps.' Ret. Bd. v. City of Portland, 69 Or. App. 117, 684 P.2d 609 (1984)). Specifically, the court found that control over day-to-day operations was not necessary for its ruling because under the articles of incorporation the city council could dissolve the corporation at any time, and the directors served at the council's pleasure. Id. at 121-22. The fact that the city never exercised that authority did not matter—just having it was enough to make the nonprofit corporation an instrumentality of Portland. Id. at 122.

These sources support Dolan's position that, analytically, the issue is the nature of the relationship between the county and the defender organizations. There is a substantial body of law distinguishing between the employment relationship and the independent contractor relationship. The bedrock principle upon which relationships are analyzed under the common law is the right of control.

Hollingbery v. Dunn, 68 Wn.2d 75, 80-81, 411 P.2d 431 (1966). The focus is on substance and not on corporate forms, titles, labels, or paperwork. See WAC 415-02-110(2)(c) (noting that for purposes of PERS eligibility, "whether the parties regard the worker as being an independent contractor is not controlling" and "disclaimers . . . are not binding on the department for the purpose of determining employer-employee status").

Dolan's argument is further supported by the statutory definition of "employee." In 1997, the legislature amended the PERS statutes. Laws of 1997, ch. 254. The definition of "employee" in former RCW 41.40.010(22), recodified as RCW 41.40.010(12), was amended with instructions to the Department of Retirement Systems (DRS) to "adopt rules and interpret [the] subsection consistent with common law." Laws of 1997, ch. 254, § 10(22). The legislature made clear that the amendments were meant to be "consistent with long-standing common law of the state of Washington and long-standing department of retirement systems' interpretations of the appropriate standard to be used in determining employee status." Id., § 1(2). Therefore, if the "arm and agency" theory asserted by Dolan is part of Washington common law or relied on by DRS, the county's control over the organizations may be determinative of whether the organizations' employees are employees as defined by RCW 41.40.010(12).

The attorney general opinion relied on by Dolan is both a part of Washington common law and used by DRS in determining employee status. In that opinion, as described above, the attorney general found that ASUW was an "arm and agency" of the State because the university had the power to control its actions, and thus its employees were PERS eligible. 1956 Op. Att'y Gen. No. 267, at 2-3. First, this court, albeit in a different context, adopted and applied the reasoning of the attorney general opinion over 30 years ago, and explained that, although the university had never exercised its power, failure to exercise it did not mean the power did not exist. Good v. Associated Students of Univ. of Wash., 86 Wn.2d 94, 97-99, 542 P.2d 762 (1975). The court therefore rejected the contention of three students that ASUW was an independent organization and not an "arm and agency" of the university. Id. at 99.

Second, the same attorney general opinion has been relied on by DRS in the context of PERS eligibility. According to the record, following a newspaper exposé claiming that the Washington State University (WSU) bookstore was operating for profit, "it was questioned whether the bookstore's employees should be covered under [PERS]." CP at 6608 (DRS Mem.). Further investigation revealed that the "State Auditor . . . did not consider this entity either as part of WSU or as another state agency or political subdivision." Id. The bookstore's payroll officer likewise asserted that "the bookstore is considered a separate operation and not part of the University." Id. The DRS audit team requested review from the DRS Legal Affairs

Unit. Id. at 6610. In answering the question of whether the bookstore was a valid PERS employer, and thus whether its employees were validly enrolled in PERS, the DRS response stated that under the 1956 attorney general opinion it did not matter whether the bookstore was considered a separate PERS employer or simply part of the university. CP at 6606 (DRS Letter Ruling, Dec. 31, 1990). The letter explained that “the Bookstore is an arm and agency of WSU (AGO 55-57 No. 267), as the entire capital stock of the Bookstore is under the control of the WSU Board of Regents.” Id. Thus there was no question that the employees were PERS eligible; the only question was the administrative one of whether the bookstore should have reported as a separate entity or under the umbrella of WSU. Id. at 6607. The letter did not answer that question. Id.

According to the attorney general opinion adopted by this court and DRS, the State may have such control over an entity that it is an arm and agency of the State, and its employees therefore eligible for PERS as “employees” under RCW 41.40.010(12).¹³ We thus can consider whether, under the common law as

¹³ The county is correct that both this court’s opinion in Good and the DRS interpretation addressed above are distinguishable because the right to control was explicit in the corporate articles or bylaws of the organizations at issue, but that fact should not end the inquiry. As in Hollingbery and the common law, we must look beyond formalities to the actual nature of the relationship. Hollingbery, 68 Wn.2d at 80 (“Whether in a given situation, one is an employee or an independent contractor depends to a large degree upon the facts and circumstances of the transaction and the context in which they must be considered.”). The county makes two arguments disputing this proposition. First, the county asserts that the definition of a public employer for PERS purposes does not include private nonprofit corporations. See RCW 41.40.010(13)(a), (b) (former RCW 41.40.010(4)(a), (b)). The county argues that because the statute defines a PERS employer in relevant part as “every branch, department, agency, commission, board, and office of the state” the defender organizations cannot be PERS employers. See id. It asserts that because the county did not enact ordinances designating the organizations as official county departments, they cannot be PERS employers under the statute. The county’s argument is high formalism, and entirely overlooks the fact that the “arms and incorporated into former RCW 41.40.010(22), the employees of the defender organizations are state employees.

b. County Control Over Defender Organizations

We would like to emphasize that no single factor controls. Hollingbery, 68 Wn.2d at 81. An independent contractor, whether for profit or nonprofit, does not lose its independence simply because it is providing a public service at the request of the government. Further, government can and should exact high standards of performance from its independent contractors. Prudent financial controls and careful oversight of contract compliance does not render a contractor an agency of the government.¹⁴ “The retention of the right to inspect and supervise to insure the proper completion of the contract does not vitiate the independent contractor relationship.” Hennig v. Crosby Group, Inc., 116 Wn.2d 131, 134, 802 P.2d 790 (1991) (quoting Epperly v. City of Seattle, 65 Wn.2d 777, 785, 399 P.2d 591 (1965)). However, government cannot create an agency to perform a government function, incorporate it into its yearly budget process and control it like any other agencies” determination rests on the amount of control the county has, not the method by which the county creates its departments. We reject such a limited view of what constitutes a government agency. Second, the county argues that “de facto” agencies are disfavored under Washington law. Br. of Pet’r at 55. It bases this argument on “the well-understood concept that while there can be a de facto officer, there can be no officer de facto without an office de jure.” Id. The county also cites some case law that has little discernable relevance to the case at hand. See Higgins v. Salewsky, 17 Wn. App. 207, 562 P.2d 655 (1977). This argument is at best obscure and at worst nonsensical.

government agency, and claim it is an independent contractor simply because of the form of name or title.

The county argues that “[t]he proper focus . . . is the County’s control over the manner in which the corporations’ attorneys and staff perform their work.” Reply Br. of Pet’r at 4. The county argues that the defenders are free to defend clients without interference and may hire and fire without interference, and that the county does not interfere with the defender groups’ day-to-day activities. Thus the county reasons that it merely seeks a result as a principle and does not control the manner in which the independent contractors perform. Id. at 21 (citing Hollingbery, 68 Wn.2d at 80-81; Restatement (Second) of Agency § 220 (1958)). Under its reasoning, the county could turn its sheriff’s department into a nonprofit corporation and because the sheriff generally has authority to hire and fire and carry out police work, the sheriff’s department would become an independent contractor. The county is wrong.¹⁵

¹⁵ The dissent argues, like the county, that lack of control over the day-to-day job performance of the organizations’ employees precludes a finding that the employees are entitled to PERS benefits. The dissent is correct that control over the details of the work is generally the fundamental inquiry in determining employment relationships. However, that test is unhelpful in this case for several reasons. First, “a public defender is not amenable to administrative direction in the same sense as other employees of the State.” Polk County v. Dodson, 454 U.S. 312, 321, 102 S. Ct. 445, 70 L. Ed. 2d 509 (1981). Because “a public defender works under canons of professional responsibility that mandate his exercise of independent judgment on behalf of the client,” and “it is the constitutional obligation of the State to respect the professional independence of the public defenders whom it engages,” insistence on the traditional test of control over the details of the employee’s day-to-day job performance is unworkable in this context. Id. at 321-22. Second, the DRS itself has, for similar reasons, determined that an employee relationship existed under similar circumstances despite lack of control over details. Resp’ts’ Br. at 40. The DRS held that a judge who contracted with the City of Kent was an employee for PERS purposes despite an explicit disclaimer in the contract, and despite the fact that the city had no control over the details of his work. CP at 2183-96 (In re the Petition of Robert McSeveney (9/16/2003)). Many of the factors applied to the judge by the DRS are strikingly similar to the factors as applied to the agency

A review of the record reveals that the county, perhaps for very legitimate reasons, has gradually extended its right of control over the defender organizations until they indeed have become vassal agencies of the county. The following examples of the county's right of control over the defender organizations support our conclusion that, under common law principles, the defender organizations are in fact agencies of the county. The defender organizations were created specifically to carry out a constitutionally mandated function of the county. Generally, independent contractors determine their own formal structure, such as the composition of their boards, articles, and bylaws; but the county has imposed stringent control over the defender organizations' formal structure. Generally, independent contractors may have many clients, but the defender organizations are true captives of the county in the sense that they cannot have other clients without the county's consent and the county provides virtually all of the organizations' funding.¹⁶ Independent contractors can usually bid for or negotiate contracts; the employees. Compare CP at 2193-94 (DRS WAC Factor Chart), with CP at 7171-81 (Respondents' WAC Factor Chart). Finally, the dissent's limitation of the common law control test to individual employees entirely ignores the fact that an organization may be an arm and agency of the State. That determination, as we have described, turns on the nature of the relationship between organizations, not individual employees within the organizations.

¹⁶ The county counters that like an independent contractor, some of the organizations can and do contract separately with municipalities other than King County. Br. of Pet'r at 17 n.3 (citing, e.g., CP at 2843-44 (Chapman Dep. at 113-14)). Presumably the county means the city of Seattle, since that is the only other municipality with which the record shows the organizations contracted. E.g., id. at 659-60. Other than cities and other government entities, the county strictly limits with whom the organizations may contract. The county code states that the county "may enter into agreements with nonprofit corporations formed for the specific purpose of rendering legal services in behalf of indigents to provide legal services to persons eligible for representation through the public defense program." King County Code 2.60.040. The county has interpreted this to mean the organizations, unlike a true independent contractor, may never "engage[] in providing [] any other form of legal representation – whether for profit or pro bono." CP at 2232 (Farley Decl.).

contracts of the defender organizations are merely a pass-through of the county's budgeting process.¹⁷ Independent contractors may generally lease space or acquire property without approval; the defender organizations may not lease or acquire property without the county's approval and the county has asserted that property owned by the organizations belongs to the county.¹⁸

Further, independent contractors would generally realize profits or losses and nonprofit entities would be entitled to set aside money for future growth and expansion. Independent contractors generally do not have customers establish a pay scale for their employees or require the independent contractors to give their employees the same cost-of-living increases that the customer's employees receive.¹⁹ While no single factor or combination of factors is controlling, we hold that the county has exerted such a right of control over the defender organizations as to make them agencies of the county.² We hold that under Washington common law as adopted in RCW 41.40.010(12), the employees of the defender organizations are

¹⁸ The county appears to have changed its rent approval requirements upon being made aware of the employees' claims in this lawsuit. CP at 2834-35 (Chapman Dep.).

² The dissent suggests our holding "places numerous government contracts with independent contractors at risk of being misconstrued as creating employer-employee relationships." Dissent at 11 n.6. The dissent cites no examples of contractors whose circumstances even remotely resemble those of the public defenders here.

Dolan (Kevin) v. King County, No. 82842-3

employees of the county for purposes of PERS.

3. King County's Affirmative Defenses

a. Collateral Estoppel

The county argues collateral estoppel bars Dolan's claim on the basis of an unpublished summary judgment order in White v. Northwest Defenders Ass'n that found an NDA employee was not an employee of the King County OPD for the purposes of a wrongful termination claim. Order Granting Summ. J., White v. NDA, No. 94-2-09128-0 (King County Super. Ct., Wash. Dec. 2, 1994). Collateral estoppel requires, at a minimum, that the identical issue was decided in the prior action. Hanson v. City of Snohomish, 121 Wn.2d 552, 561, 852 P.2d 295 (1993). In White, the issue was whether the OPD was vicariously liable for employment discrimination, and the court issued a three-page summary judgment order determining that it was not. Here the issue is whether Dolan and the class he represents are PERS eligible. The cases are not comparable. Moreover, collateral estoppel requires identical parties or privity with the original parties. Id. Ted White was fired from NDA in 1994, and the class includes persons who have worked for one of the four defender organizations between 2003 and 2009. Thus he is not, as the county asserts, a "member of the class," and there is no privity. Br. of Pet'r at 60. We reject the county's collateral estoppel argument.

b. Equitable Estoppel

The county asserts that because the organizations filed nonprofit corporate forms with the IRS, and because the employees participated in certain benefits programs available only to private employees, and organized in labor unions with representatives certified by the National Labor Relations Board, Dolan is equitably estopped from claiming PERS benefits. Equitable estoppel requires (1) an admission, act, or statement inconsistent with a later claim; (2) another party's reasonable reliance on the admission, act, or statement; and (3) injury to the other party that would result if the first party is allowed to contradict or repudiate the earlier admission, act, or statement. Lybbert v. Grant County, 141 Wn.2d 29, 35, 1 P.3d 1124 (2000) (quoting Bd. of Regents v. City of Seattle, 108 Wn.2d 545, 551, 741 P.2d 11 (1987)). Perhaps because King County required the defender organizations to give the appearance of being private, the county is arguing the employees cannot now claim to be public employees. But it is difficult to understand how the county relied on their private status, or what else the employees should have done. Moreover, accepting the county's argument would elevate form over substance. That is clearly contrary to the scheme laid out by the legislature and DRS. See RCW 41.40.010(12); WAC 415-02-110. The county's equitable estoppel argument is not convincing, and we reject it as well.²¹

CONCLUSION

We affirm the trial court's determination that employees of the agencies are also county employees for the purposes of PERS. We hold that King County has such a right of control over the defender organizations that they are arms and agencies of the county. We remand to the trial court for further proceedings

²¹ The dissent makes a similar argument, claiming that the organizations can "realize the benefits of being both a private employer and an agency of the County." Dissent at 9. We make no such holding. There may well be collateral consequences for the public defender organizations resulting from their status as arms and agencies of the State. But those consequences are not now before us.
